Cragmont School Born Again

The new Cragmont School 1999. All pictures courtesy of Cragmont School Library.

How many lives does a cat have? Nine maybe? How many lives does Cragmont School have? At least four.

There was a Cragmont school in 1925. In 1926/7 a new school was built. It was a two story, tile roofed building that lasted until 1976. That is the school I remember and attended in the 1930's. But, that school was deemed not seismic safe so it was rebuilt. However, some seismic issues still remained and in 1997 it was rebuilt to its present form and completed in late 1999.

The principal, Jason Lustig, has been involved with it nearly since its new beginning. In the mid 1990's the Berkeley voters approved a bond measure to rebuild or modify many public schools. But Cragmont was not on the list. So, parents and staff worked very hard to get school board approval (and helped raise funds and get grants) to rebuild that school as well.

Now there are 18 classrooms on two stories and a third floor houses a 12,000-book library. There is a nice big multipurpose room with a stage. Modern schools require a computer room and there are about 20 computers available for student use. Also, there is a special science room. The playground is on three levels. A large grassy area to the west, a higher level for games accommodating common playground paraphernalia and yet at another level are some basketball courts. The kindergartners have a play area sectioned

Jason Lustig is a hands on principal who can be seen roaming the hallways, helping out in the classrooms and solving those situations that may occur in a school environment. So far, each year he has given the students a "Principal's Challenge". If the students pass the challenge, then something weird happens to the principal. One year, several students pass the challenge, then something weird happens to the principal. One year, several students selected by a drawing covered his head with sticky, gooey substances! Yuck. The next year with much joy and merriment, selected students shaved his head and made him look like Jeff Garcia.

Cragmont's population is about 400 students in grades K through 5th with ment activities such as mask making and circus acts. Since this is outside the usual curricula, there is a cost to the parents. The fee is on a sliding scale based on need.

This summer, the principal is planning to activate a mentoring and guidance program called Cragmont Scholars. This program will be geared to ensuring academically smart students will retain and expand their knowledge and abilities. This is necessary because many children whose parents may not have higher education might fall into the trap of complacency in the upper grades.

There is a wide range of intellect and although there is not a special program for gifted students at Cragmont, the teachers provide assignments according to the students' level.

about 32% white, 20% Latino, 25% black, 4% Asian and 19% mixed. In the lower grades there are about 20 students in each class.

The school is involved in BSEP (Berkeley School Excel Program) in which all students participate. This enrichment program promotes the arts, dance and music for at least two hours a week.

About one third of the students are involved in 2-way immersion, bilingual instruction where English and Spanish are taught by in house teachers.

About 100 students participate in the daily after school programs. This provides for extra activities in the learning center, athletics, art instruction and other enrich-

Alumni are encouraged to visit Cragmont School to see what is going on these days in the elementary school scene.

In the library, there are pictures of the four Cragmont Schools.

Visiting hours are 8:30am - 3pm on school days.

Don't forget to check in with the receptionist, though.

Washington Elementary's Jr. Traffic Patrol..

I always wanted to be in the Jr Traffic Patrol while I attended Washington Elementary School. I marveled at the formations the three lines would go through and end up back together all marching in the same direction. Officer Paul Herrick of the BPD and Mr. Yoshida would put the squad through weekly drills to prepare them for their daily duties at the street corners surrounding the school and the Citywide Review at Edwards Field in May.

I finally got my chance when I reached the 5th Grade. I'm not sure if I got in on my own accord, or if having an older brother in the Patrol before me gave me a little edge...my best friend, Vernon Nakahara also was "drafted" into the Patrol. His older brother and mine were in Mr. Yoshida's 5th and 6th grade class. Even though I wasn't in Mr. Yoshida's class, I always looked up to him as a mentor. Little did I know about his music background; and that some 20 years later, I learned that my wife's mother had played piano in his band.

George Yoshida was born on April 9, 1922 in Seattle Washington. Both his father and mother were musically talented; together they provided the nurturing environment, as well as the genetic predilection for George's musical tastes.

George honed his skills as a drummer during the war years spent at Poston Detention Camp in Arizona. He became proactive there with his music. After the war, he and his wife settled in El Cerrito. He went back to school to get his Teaching Credential, and was the second Japanese American to be hired by the BUSD. His entire teaching career was spent at Washington Elementary School.

His musical career had been on going since the late thirties. When Jazz advocate Herb Wong became the Principal at Washington School, they became fast friends. He initiated an innovative jazz education program, and brought to the school a series of concerts that introduced jazz to the students. Duke Ellington was one of the jazz artists to perform at the school. There even was a Washington School Faculty Jazz Band.

After retiring from teaching in 1987, George's musical career took off again. He started the J-Town Jazz Ensemble, which he still directs and plays the drums for. He also authored the book, "Reminiscing in Swingtime" which chronicles the Japanese American Jazz movement from the early 1920's to the present.

Lawson Fusao Inada, author of "Legends from Camp" and "Drawing the Line" had this to say about the book: Music is the heartbeat of society; thus, to read this book is to feel the heartbeat, and hear the soundtrack of the Nikkei community in the 20th Century. These are the voices; this is their song, as never before made public, of the enduring people that managed, on sheer strength and spirit, to make beautiful music even in the forbidding barrens of American concentration camps. Thanks to George Yoshida for recording and sharing this significant contribution to American culture and history.

Thank you, George Yoshida, for your years of leadership, as an educator, Jr. Traffic Patrol Advisor, musician and mentor to all of us who had the privilege of attending Washington School during your 35 years of teaching there.

Berkeley's Austin Nichols scores high at Humboldt State

When he finally got back to Arcata, Austin Nichols found time to catch a couple of NCAA Tournament games on TV. "Mostly, I came home and went to sleep," Nichols said.

After all, the 21-year-old Berkeley High alum already had been to the Final Four. Nichols led Humboldt State to the NCAA Division II national semifinals in Bakersfield, where the Lumberjacks' greatest season ended with an 81-67 loss to eventual champion Kennesaw State of Georgia. "It's been a great experience," said Nichols, named recently to the Basketball Times' Division II All-America second-team. "We got to see what the atmosphere was like, and that was something new for me."

The Division I and II tournaments never will be confused, but, as Humboldt coach

Powell (Betsy Snyder) (BHS 1960) renewed from Berkeley, where she is an M.D. in private family medicine. - Kathryn C. He is married to Kathy Balamuth (Siefert), who has also renewed her membership. Thank you both! - Caria Tomdzkowska (BHS 1964), past president of BAA,

Tom Wood said, "I tell our guys bigtime is where you're at. For us, it's the ultimate. There's nothing better than that for our level."

Certainly there was nothing better in Arcata, where folks embrace the Lumberjacks program. 1,400-seat East Gym are sold out by July, and games are telecast on the local access channel.

Wood said he tries selling his program to recruits with the idea that they can be a big fish in a smaller pond. "A Southern California kid thinks we are way up north, like in Bakersfield," he said.

Nichols turned out to be one of the biggest fish Humboldt ever landed. He scored 2,201 career points - more than any Bay Area Division I player ever scored - and broke the old Humboldt record by nearly 1,400 points.

Nichols set a school record with 46 points against Seattle Pacific last year, and hit the game-winning 3-pointer in a 73071 exhibition win this season over Nevada, which reached the Division I Sweet 16 round.

Nichols will graduate in June with a degree in business administration, and expects to get the chance to play somewhere on the professional level. It might not be the highest level, but Nichols has been down that road before and made it work.

"I had goals of playing Division I basketball," Nichols said. "But my main goal was to get to college and get an education." Now there's a concept.
